Let every man rejoice for this is a wonderful world, and life in it given him but once; yet if affliction befall him, let him not rebel, but suffer patiently; for, as darkness is the background of light, he must needs grieve, that happiness be known to him.

Every man's heart must be tried, that he lack not in truth or courage, but when sorrow be taken from him, then let him cast it off forever. Let him dwell not on that which is past, but forgetting evil, look to that which is good so that out of sorrow may grow gladness, as day springs from the shadow of night.

Say Nay

ALTO

Ah, next to light,
Lies ever shade,
The sweetest flower
The one to fade
Or blow away

AIR

And so goodbye,
Is not all vain?
Could fleeting time
Return again
E'en for a day?

TENOR

'Twould be as fresh,
As dear, as fair,
'Twould fill our hearts
To leave them bare,
Ah nay! nay nay!

Be not so blind,
Yet be so kind,
As not to see,
More than we find.

Sun Cups.

Tenebrae.
Sweet flower's breath,
Lie hushed in death,
Birds flown with May,
The road is long,
When not a song,
Gladdens the way!
The sun has gone,
That promised morn,
Once full of light,
Ah, hope seems far,
When not a star,
Shines through the night!

No mortal hand that joy can stave,
No human power change our loss.
Some carry flowers to the grave,
While others bear along the cross

Great may be the thought inspired by a flower yet its Makers thought is the flower itself.

Each life shall know happier hours,
Each song a sweeter refrain,
The song of the upspringing flowers,
After the storm and the rain.
Spring Blossom.

When the day closes think not on the falling shadows but on the coming morn. When words hurt thee, seek not their sting but their justice. When friends fall, raise them by the strength of thy forgiveness. When duty is kind, be too grateful to neglect it. When duty is hard be too proud to falter. When thou findest the right path thank God for the pointing finger and walk straight that those on the road be better for thy passing.
